Chocolate

While I was out shopping in the local supermarket I met a friend of mine. It was great to see her, although she had put on a lot of weight. While we were chatting I looked into her trolley and I was surprised to see how much chocolate was in there. "Ah, yes," Cheryl said, "I know it's bad for the children to eat so much chocolate but I like it, too." We went on chatting and then decided to have a coffee together after we'd both done our shopping. Two hours later we met again.

In the café I ordered an espresso, but Cheryl asked for a hot chocolate and two pieces of chocolate cake. "Oh, not for me thanks," I said. Cheryl went red in the face and said with a forced laugh, "they're both for me – I'm very hungry!" While she was eating and drinking I was looking at her. "You certainly like your chocolate!" I laughed. Then she looked very serious and said in a whisper. "Please don't laugh, please don't tell anyone, nobody knows – but I love chocolate, I can't live without chocolate!"

Cheryl went on to tell me that for some years now she had begun to eat a lot of chocolate. It started because whenever she felt unhappy or angry she had a bar of chocolate, which would make her feel better. Then she needed to have the chocolate no matter how she felt; it was like when smokers want to smoke, she said. She said she had a box in a cupboard just for her chocolate bars, it was hidden away because she was afraid to tell her problem to her husband.

Cheryl wanted to read a lot on chocolate to see if her problem was very bad for her or not. She wondered whether eating a lot of chocolate was all and perhaps there was nothing to worry about. "There was a report that said that chocolate might help if you have heart problems. I thought this was a positive thing, but then I saw that the report was written by a company that makes chocolate! Of course they write positive things about their chocolate! I was sure it was not true what the company had written." Cheryl took another big bite. "Other studies wrote that if you eat chocolate three times a month, you'll live a year longer." But then she read that chocolate can lead to a great risk in heart problems! So, what is true about chocolate?

The only good thing she learned from the studies was that dark chocolate is better for her than milk chocolate.

We had now both finished our drinks, and Cheryl's plate was clean. So what was she going to do about this? "I don't know!" she said. I didn't know either.
