Modern Women

What does it mean to be (0)___ (B)___ successful woman? Half a century ago, most people (1)___ you a simple answer: get married at the age of 20 and have three or four children. (2)___ women in 1950 stayed at home and (3)___ their children, depending on their husbands to support the family. Higher education was a man's privilege. Three times (4)___ many men as women studied at universities.

These days, with better chances of education women have far more options. They can get married, live with a partner, or (5)___ single. Women are now told that they can do and be anything they want. Once they could only have such (6)___ as secretaries, nurses or teachers. Now women in Western countries earn 57 per cent of all university diplomas and (7)___ to become lawyers, astronauts and architects.

As the following example illustrates, the idea of a successful woman (8)___ a lot since 1900. Women's fight to change their situation started in the 19th century, but most Western women (9)___ the right to vote only in the 20th century. Now, at the beginning of the 21st century, it is common to see women working in top jobs (10)___ were formerly only for men. There are also women who are (11)___ perfectly pleased to be stay-at-home mothers without a professional career. Penny Bond is a successful South African woman who chose not to be a stay-at-home mum. Here's her story:

"I had expected to study, work for a few years, then get married, give up work, be a good housewife and mother, and stay married for life. That was my (12)___ life, but mine never happened that way. Fortunately, my parents wanted me to have a career. They (13)___ me to study and work in a largely male field: design. This was the old South Africa, where women were considered second-class citizens."

"I struggled in the design studios where I was employed as the "lowest of the low". But being treated this way gave me the strength to set up a design studio of (14)___. I struggled there too, because I had to persuade people to trust me. I often thought I wasn't as good as male designers – but I held on, and after the political changes women's situation (15)___. My life, my career and my business became really successful."

Első szöveg:

Homes and Holidays

“The palace?” my mother asked with excitement. “We're going to stay at the palace?” “I suppose so,” I replied. In booking my annual holiday in India this year, I had decided on a change from the usual round of visits to friends and relatives. My mother, my sons and I would instead play tourist in our native Kerala — and check into the classy resorts that have recently appeared around the state. I wondered how the place I knew as a kid had become India's No. 1 tourist destination.

My parents were born in villages around Kerala. They moved away as teenagers, which meant they kept having to go back to visit. So when my sisters and I were growing up, whether in Bombay or abroad, we always knew where we'd spend our annual family holidays — not in some exotic locale like London or the Caribbean but back ‘home’ in rural Kerala. There we'd complain about the sadness of village life, the lack of other youngsters, the annoying mosquitoes. “This annual migration,” I told my father when I was 13, “is for the birds.”

Yet as adults we did the same. My sisters and I each winter round up our American-reared children, fly over the ocean, and head for Kerala, rather self-consciously “renewing our roots” and teaching the new generation some sense of belonging. This time, however, as we visited our 200-year-old ancestral home in a seemingly timeless village, it was Kerala itself that had changed. Tourism promoters have lately realized the region's exceptional beauty - lush green fields, mild winters, golden beaches. Since then travelers have come flocking.

I worked out our itinerary: five top-class resorts in 15 days. My mother couldn't believe it when I told her. “The palace!” “What's the big deal?” I asked. “Tourists in that area have been staying in converted palaces for decades. It's the one thing palaces are good for in our democratic age - serving as hotels.” “You don't understand,” Mother replied. “This is Kovilakom Palace in Kollengode.”

Then I realized. Kollengode, a tiny town miles from any place, was where she was born. “When I was a little girl, I used to walk along the outer walls of the palace every day on my way to school,” she said. “It looked so huge, so forbidding. It was unimaginable that I could even step into it, or stay there. Visitors were not allowed inside. And now we're going to stay there?” “Four nights,” I said. And so it happened. A few weeks ago my mother woke up in a royal bedroom and had her breakfast there. Just down the road, our ancestral village could be seen, as farmers plowed the fields as their ancestors had done for centuries. I smiled at my mother when she returned from an hour-long massage, which was meant to ease her backache. “Welcome home,” I said.

A New Campaign by White Cross

The White Cross Animal Protection Society, Hungary's oldest animal protection organization, has just published a new educational workbook for students aged 6 - 10. The workbook, called The Book for Children Who Love Animals, was written by volunteer Kristin Faurest, and illustrated by graphic artist Eric Rainsberry. It is part of an educational program that the White Cross offers to schools in which a staff member from the White Cross gives an interactive presentation about responsible pet care and animal protection.

Students are allowed to keep the booklet and complete its activities in class or as homework. The White Cross, which saves and finds new homes for several hundred abandoned and badly treated cats and dogs each year, believes that education is the most powerful tool for preventing cruelty to animals and helping children to understand the joy and responsibility of having a pet. Furthermore, developing a sense of care and responsibility towards animals goes far beyond helping only animals: many studies have shown that most violent criminals began by hurting animals, and a badly treated pet in a household is often a sign that other domestic violence is happening, too.

The aims of this book and the presentation/ educational program that it accompanies are simple and important:

- to teach children the elements of responsible pet care
- to tell the children about the stray-animal problem and how they can help
- to create a sense of responsibility in children towards stray or badly treated animals in their community
- to teach children the basics of the animal protection law and the importance of noticing and reporting cruelty to animals in their community

White Cross staff are available to make presentations to students in both English and Hungarian starting right after the Christmas break. The booklet can be downloaded directly from the organization's website at www.feherkeresztliga.hu. It can also be ordered by post from Kristin Faurest at faurest.kristin@chello.hu. Schools interested in hosting a presentation held by the White Cross can also contact Miss Faurest by email or on 06/20 958-2545. There is no charge for the booklet or the presentations.

Our magazine has been a media sponsor to the White Cross for several years free-of-charge in the hope of finding new owners for abandoned animals and helping to prevent cruelty to animals.
